force the unique ability to become vested partners of the company and results in a stable, talented growth-oriented employee base.”

Spratt’s crews drew from all of their expertise to prepare and complete a job in Prince William County recently, Tait says. “This project was a high-profile job for the National Park Service at Prince William Forest Park. It involved more than 14 miles of water pipe, with little damage to the park’s trees, and no trace visible after the work was done.”

The job was awarded to Spratt through a technical proposal process rather than hard bid or design-build, Tait says. Due to its complexity our client did not feel that competitive bidding would best serve the project’s need for
